Privacy Act reboot emphasises data protection

From 1st Dec 2020, Privacy Act was overhauled to protect personal information in the digital age. Changes to the Privacy Act mean businesses must:

- report serious privacy breaches
- check personal information shared with overseas companies will have similar protection to New Zealand.

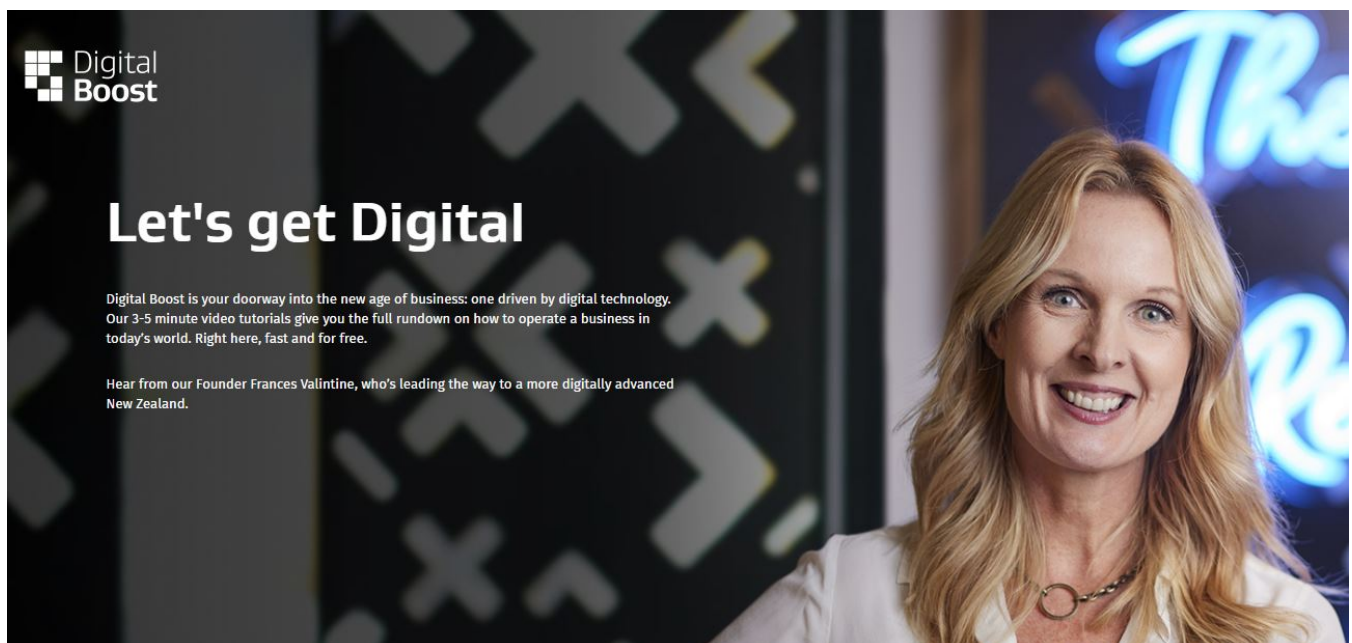

Overseas businesses operating in New Zealand must meet privacy requirements, including multi-nationals offering services like cloud software or social media.

The revamped Act gives the Privacy Commissioner greater powers. This includes:

- ordering a business to give a person their personal information
- issuing a compliance notice if a business fails to comply with the Privacy Act.

So it's a good idea to appoint a privacy officer, eg add privacy duties to a trusted employee's existing role. For more information, visit <https://privacy.org.nz/>
